And there is a desire on the part of many middle-aged and older adults for self-improvement.

A study by Louis Harris Associates for the National Council on the Aging found that one of every 10 persons older than 65 had less than five years formal education.

More than one-third of those older than 40 and 15 percent of those older than 65 said they would like to learn some new skills or participate in job training to change occupations, the study found.
